Consultant Solicitor

Why become a consultant solicitor now?

For many solicitors, the traditional law-firm model no longer offers the balance they want.

Long hours, rigid working structures, billing targets and limited control over their own careers can leave even the most talented lawyers feeling restricted.

The consultancy route allows you to carve your own path.

We are looking for ambitious, commercially minded solicitors to join us as Consultant Solicitors, giving you the opportunity to take greater ownership of your career, develop your own client relationships and enjoy the flexibility to practise law on your terms.

Whether you are an experienced solicitor looking for a better work-life balance, a parent seeking greater flexibility, a lawyer who wants to grow their own client base, or someone ready to take control of their financial future, this could be the opportunity you have been waiting for.

Why become a Consultant Solicitor?

1. Freedom to work on your terms

Take greater control over where, when and how you work. Enjoy the flexibility to organise your workload around your clients, your commitments and the life you want outside the office rather than having your life dictated by a traditional nine-to-five structure.

2. Greater financial freedom

Build your income around the work you generate, with the potential to retain a significantly greater share of the fees you bill compared with many traditional employment arrangements. The more you develop your practice and client relationships, the more opportunity you may have to grow your earnings, subject to the firm's fee-sharing structure and applicable costs.

3. Build your own practice and personal brand

Develop your own client base, strengthen your professional reputation and grow a practice that reflects your expertise, interests and ambitions. You can focus on the areas of law you enjoy and the clients you want to serve.

4. Escape the traditional law-firm pressures

Move away from the conventional office-based model and seek a more autonomous way of practising. Enjoy greater control over your workload, your working arrangements and your professional direction, within the firm's regulatory and client-care requirements.

5. Protect your work-life balance

Your career should support your life, not consume it. Whether you want more time with your family, greater freedom to travel, the ability to manage personal commitments or simply more control over your day, consultancy can offer a more adaptable way to work.

6. Enjoy independence without having to do everything alone

Being a Consultant Solicitor does not have to mean going it alone. Depending on the firm's offering, you can benefit from an established professional environment, access to systems and administrative support, and the reassurance of working within an appropriate regulatory framework while maintaining greater autonomy over your practice.

7. Create a career with room to grow

Take ownership of your professional future. Build meaningful client relationships, expand your network, develop your reputation and create a sustainable practice that reflects your long-term goals.

Who are we looking for?

We would love to hear from solicitors who:

- Are qualified solicitors in England and Wales, with relevant experience in their chosen practice area.
- 8 Years PQE+
- Have a strong commitment to client service, professional standards and delivering excellent legal advice.
- Are commercially minded and interested in developing or bringing their own client relationships.
- Want greater flexibility, autonomy and control over their working lives.
- Are motivated to grow their practice and make the most of their earning potential.
- Value independence but recognise the importance of collaboration, compliance and professional support.

Solicitors from a range of practice areas are encouraged to enquire, subject to the firm's current requirements and regulatory arrangements.

Is consultancy right for you?

A consultant model can be particularly attractive if you want to move beyond the limitations of traditional employment. It can offer greater autonomy, flexibility and potential financial upside, but it also requires initiative, commercial awareness and responsibility for developing and maintaining a sustainable practice.

The right structure should give you the freedom to thrive while ensuring you understand the fee split, costs, support available, client ownership arrangements and any business development expectations before you commit.

Next Steps:

Get in touch for a confidential conversation to explore whether becoming a Consultant Solicitor could be the right next step in your career.

Contact:
Info@altioralegalgroup.co.uk
03330509103